

Fastest method for fiber optic cable stripping

AI Overview

Using precision fiber optic strippers with matched blades and fiber guides is the fastest and safest method for stripping fiber optic cables without damaging the glass core.

Mechanical Stripping Tools

The most common and efficient method is using mechanical fiber optic strippers, which are designed to remove the coating or buffer cleanly and quickly. These tools have color-coded blades matched to specific fiber diameters, allowing rapid adjustment and consistent stripping lengths. The fiber is held securely in a guide, and the coating is removed in a single motion, minimizing the risk of nicks or scratches on the glass core. For multi-layer cables, the outer jacket, aramid yarn, and buffer must be stripped progressively, but mechanical strippers can handle each layer efficiently.

Specialized Kits

Fiber stripping kits, such as the TSK1 kit from Thorlabs, include multiple blade sets and fiber guides for different coating diameters. These kits allow technicians to switch quickly between fibers and coatings, significantly speeding up the process compared to manual or improvised methods. The inclusion of a bare fiber gripper ensures a secure hold without microfractures, which is faster and safer than wrapping or clamping the fiber end.
